WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong system will pass through today bringing heavier rain, mountain snow and gusty winds. Lighter showers will continue through early next week with lighter south winds and continued below normal temperatures.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A storm will move into Northern California bringing scattered showers to most of the region through this evening. Most locations will receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall, but the Central Sierra and its surrounding foothills will receive between 1 and 2 inches of rainfall. A second storm will move inland to the north possibly bringing isolated showers to the area Monday and Tuesday. There will be little or no rainfall with this second storm. South to southwest winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through Sunday and then there will be westerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph over the wind prone areas Monday and Tuesday. Temperatures will be near normal today, with upper 50s and 60s across the mountains and 70s to low 80s in the valleys. Temperatures will cool to the upper 40s and 50s across the mountains and 60s to low 70s in the valleys Sunday through Tuesday. A strong ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean bringing a significant warming trend and low humidity to most of the region Wednesday through the end of next week. Light offshore flow will occur Wednesday through the end of next week.
